Otekkoaka sounds like the Japanese word for "boy," but the last character means "daughter." The term refers to an effeminate boy, in manner and/or in dress, who can easily pass for a very cute girl, sometimes even exceeding the usual cuteness of real girls.

PAGE 75

NTR is short for nakarete, which means "cuckolding." This is a genre of story common in adult media in which a woman cheats on her significant other with another person, stoking jealousy in the audience on the cuckold's behalf.

In the original, this gag ends in "To-to-to-to-to.....
Tomeyayoi!" "Tomeyoi! Kogyou!" is a popular Japanese chant during fireworks festivals. In this chapter, however, the pun is on the tome in Tomeyoi, which can mean "balls, testicles."

PAGE 100

Meganeotoko, which literally means "glasses girl," comes from megane, the Japanese word for "glasses." This is a popular Japanese manga and anime archetype of a person in glasses whose spectacles are regarded as one of his or her most attractive traits and an almost constant feature on their person.

PAGE 106

Laff is short for "lolita" and is a pop culture term for an attraction to underage girls.

PAGE 143

Meb characters are nameless characters who are usually in the background of a given manga/anime/game but may influence the story. In an adult video game (like a love sim), they are not characters you can pursue as a potential love interest.

PAGE 147

Yezu is the name of the police station means "wild animal."

PAGE 207

Flowers & Dreams is a parody of the real girls' manga anthology Nono to Yume, which is written here with different characters.
